Patricia Logan leaves a house party in Denver and becomes snowbound when she leaves the train in Colorado Springs. An old friend is headed for her uncle's ranch when the snow slackens, and Patricia persuades him to take her along on horseback. The two set out and soon regret their decision. Patricia dreamed of marrying Jared Booker, but now that he's back, can she get past the longstanding argument that drove him and his father away from her uncle's ranch? The question of whether or not they will survive the blizzard drives all thoughts of romance from her mind. Only God can bring them through the deadly peril of the Blizzard of 1913.
